

From the immense quantities of wine, whiskey and brandy the San Domingo Commissioners carried with them on board the Tenacity were taken out some home-brewed rum. The French Consul, M. de Belmont, being prepared to write a report on belittling terms as on anything else.

“We can’t help feeling sorry for the children of the Rev. Mr. WALSH, who starved to death in New York this morning. I am sure that he should suffer for his father’s folly in not presiding at the sort of games that pay.”

France are intensely Catholic, and Louis NAPOLEON and his government managed to get on the good side of the priests by the most great means of bribery and flattery. When Louis NAPOLEON effected his coup d'état, the villagers marched to the polls to vote for him with their priests carrying the church banners at their head, and he was elected by a vast majority, obtained such an overwhelming majority. During his entire administration the priesthood of France preached obedience to the Emperor as a sacred duty, from every pulpit, thundering against Democrats and Republicans, and against the Kingdom of Satan, threatening all who listened to them with the torments of everlasting damnation. The influence this had on an ignorant but very pious people can not be overestimated. It is not wonderful they looked with unmitigated horror upon the French Liberals who, by the little regard they entertained for the faith and prejudices of their Catholic countrymen, in a
